SPECIAL MENTIONS

Need to increase the Service Tax Net

SHRIMATI N.P. DURGA (Andhra Pradesh) : 'Services' constitute a very heterogeneous spectrum of economic activities. Over a period of time, the definition 'Service' has also undergone a change. In any Welfare State, it is the primary responsibility of the Government to fulfil the increasing developmental needs of the country and its people by way of public expenditure. India, being a developing economy, is striving to fulfil the obligations of a Welfare State within its limited resources. The service sector is now occupying the centre stage of economy; so much so, in the contemporary world, development of service sector has become synonymous with the advancement of economy. As we know that the Government's primary sources of revenue are direct and indirect taxes. Apart from getting revenue, the Government also wish to raise employment opportunities in service sector. With this view, the Government of India imposed Service Tax on some services which cover a range of activities -- management, banking, insurance, hospitality, administration, communication, entertainment, wholesale distribution and retailing including R&D activities.
